From September 1968 to August 1969, 100 patients with blunt head injury who had no evidence of meningeal irritation or intracranial vascular compromise were evaluated with serial clinical, electroencephalographic, and computed tomographic (CT) monitoring. Leukocyte count was found to be a useful adjunct in the evaluation of patients with closed head injury. Leukocytosis was the only consistent indicator of later complications, but it was usually noted on routine evaluation 4 days after injury. Leukocytosis was a poor predictor of subsequent intracranial lesions, i.e., those requiring neurosurgical intervention.The present disclosure generally relates to apparatus and methods for recognizing a pattern in an image. Pattern recognition is the process of classifying an object based on the appearance of one or more features of the object. This process is widely applied in pattern recognition technologies, such as face recognition, behavior recognition and fingerprint identification. In general, the process of detecting an object in an image is performed by first extracting a particular area of interest in the image. For example, the area of interest may be, for example, a face of a person's face or a fingerprint (i.e., a key print). This area of interest

Allopathic medical school admissions in India are directly proportional to the number of applicants. The Indian Council of Medical Education (ICME) follows the Multiple Opportunity Plan (MOP) for admitting students to five-year course of All India Institute of Medical Sciences (AIIMS) and three-year course of other medical schools. The purpose of our study was to analyse the current trend in the applicants of AIIMS. The student and faculty applications for undergraduate medical courses at AIIMS from 2005 to 2007 were evaluated using a proforma. There were 1564 applications for the academic year 2005-06, 1687 applications for the academic year 2006-07 and 1326 for the academic year 2007-08. There were 1265 women and 449 men. The students were from 12 states and union territories. Of the total 1564 applicants, 99 were from ICME-recognized state medical colleges and 61 were from co-operative or private medical colleges. The 449 applicants from co-operative or private medical colleges were from 15 states and union territories and 87 applicants from ICME-recognized state medical colleges were from Bihar. The academic qualifications differed among the three groups. The applicants from ICME-recognized medical colleges had either completed or were about to complete their MBBS course. A higher proportion (nearly two-thirds) of those applying to medical schools required an entrance examination. There was a significant change in the preference of medical students: in 2005-06, only 28.3% (n = 11) of applicants preferred non-allopathic courses; this proportion rose to 65.7% in 2007-08. The applicants preferred a medical entrance examination (from 28% to 43.7%) but only about 50% of applicants (2005-06) were prepared to take entrance examinations. The preference for allopathic course in 2007- f678ea9f9e
